

Sticky maple syrup and deep caramel sweetness open the cup, layered with cracked vanilla pod and buttery cashew. It finishes on rich cacao, while milk brings a gentle hint of malty warmth.

Modestly named after the hometown of our friend 'Matt Tripleshot', this coffee has been a staple profile in our range for a while... and there's a reason! This single origin has a great deal of versatility: we enjoy the cocoa-heavy, malted cereal character it gets as an oat flat white, or the complexity it offers when drunk as an espresso or on cafetière.

MORE ABOUT THE PRODUCER

Nestled in the heart of Brazil, the Pedra Branca farm has been lovingly nurtured by Luciano's family for over 45 years. What began as a modest plot of land has grown steadily through hard work, dedication, and a deep-rooted passion for coffee. The legacy began with Luciano's grandfather, José Braga de Oliveira, whose hands first tilled the soil and whose values continue to guide the farm today.

Luciano's journey started at the young age of 15, working side by side with his father and grandfather. It was more than just labor—it was a rite of passage, a bond forged through early mornings and the unmistakable scent of fresh coffee cherries. Fifteen years ago, Luciano discovered the world of specialty coffee and realised that his family's land, kissed by the perfect balance of altitude, soil, and climate, was ideal for cultivating beans of exceptional quality.

His passion led to years of learning and experimentation, culminating in his first specialty harvest of Yellow Catuaí in 2002, which earned an outstanding 85-point score. Since then, coffee has become more than a livelihood—it's a symbol of heritage, resilience, and aspiration for Luciano's family.

Today, coffee is not only their primary source of income but a treasured tradition, rich with meaning and memory. With eyes on the future, Luciano is committed to improving his farm's sustainability and soil health, all while continuing to elevate the quality of his specialty coffee. Each cup you enjoy is a testament to generations of care, craftsmanship, and a lifelong love for coffee.
